Brussels, 29/30 Ottobre 2015

"The social sciences and humanities have never been more important to Europe. The study of our history, societies and cultures has never been so urgent. Never before, have we so greatly needed to understand one another."

I'm here, because I want to assure you that the Commission not only values the contribution of the social sciences and humanities to research – we're depending on you. We're depending on your contribution to Europe's most pressing challenges.

- How can we tackle the issue of migration without sociologists?
- How can we reform our democratic institutions without political science?
- How can we have any vision for the future, without looking first to our common history?

Europe needs you.
