

SUMMARY

Maggie Schauer is the head of the Center of Excellence for Psychotraumatology, University Konstanz, located at the Center for Psychiatry Reichenau, Germany (www.clinical-psychology.uni-konstanz.de). She is director of outpatient services and as a clinical psychologist specialized in the field of Psychotraumatology. She has worked both, in research and clinical settings (university & rehabilitation) and in field missions in disaster and (post-) conflict areas. The latter includes acute trauma intervention and scientific studies in countries of crisis and disaster as well as applied treatment studies with former political prisoners and torture survivors, war victims, survivors of gender-based violence (Balkan, Iran/Irak, Turkey, Romania, in several African and Asian countries), ex-combatants and forensic offenders in Somalia, DR Congo and Colombia among other. She has carried out extensive field research in refugee camps in Uganda and in indigenous settlements in Northern Thailand.

Within the framework of Schauer's work as a clinician and researcher at the University of Konstanz, Germany, she cooperates and leads projects investigating possible treatments for survivors of extreme and/or prolonged stress (e.g. after torture, genocide, childhood sexual abuse). Together with Thomas Elbert and Frank Neuner, she took the lead in developing Narrative Exposure Therapy, a treatment for survivors of multiple and developmental trauma. The manual for this intervention has appeared in a second edition in 2011.

Schauer has also started to investigate treatment approaches (including the development of diagnostic instruments) for women suffering from severe and complex PTSD. Her aim is to establish evidence-based ambulatory short-treatment options for severely traumatized patients with borderline personality disorder.

More recently, Dr. Schauer's clinical and research focus has widened to include the trans-generational impact of life stress, prenatal assessment of psychosocial risk factors for development, as well as early childhood abuse and neglect. Along with understanding behavioral and epigenetic transmission patterns, she aims towards establishing evidence-based practice for the protection of infants and young children from adverse consequences of stress and trauma. This practice includes the formation and research on the effectiveness of inter-collaborative networks of pediatricians, family nurses, midwives, gynecologists, social welfare in early outreach and preventative treatments for pregnant women, at-risk mums and their babies. From 2009-2014 she was a board member and now since 2015 is an advisory board member of the NGO 'Babyforum' for the prevention of adverse childhood conditions, neglect and abuse pre- and postnatal (zero- three).

Maggie Schauer is a founding member of the NGO 'vivo international' (www.vivo.org) and advisory board member of vivo Switzerland. From 2004-2008 she was vice-president of vivo e.V. Germany and later chaired the board of this international organization for psychotraumatology. She is especially involved in the implementation of vivo's projects as it relates to implementation research, training of local and expert staff as well as carrying out trauma treatment.

As Medical Psychologist and Researcher, Schauer was on a team developing a brain-computer interface for quadriplegic 'locked-in patients' (ALS/ Lou Gering's disease) at the Eberhard-Karls-University Tübingen, Germany.

Furthermore she has worked as a Research Associate at the Fear and Anxiety Clinic at the NIMH Center for the study of Emotion and Attention, University of Florida investigating PTSD.

Formerly freelance writing for a major German newspaper (Süddeutsche Zeitung, local newsroom), Schauer engages continuously in contributing to advocacy, public relations and awareness-raising for the importance and public perception of mental health and the complex and long-lasting consequences of traumatic stress.

Achievements in 'Psychotherapy': Narrative Exposure Therapy (NET)

Dr. Schauer developed Narrative Exposure Therapy (NET) together with Professor Dr Frank Neuner and Professor Dr Thomas Elbert. She manualized the treatment approach; the book appeared in two editions in English (Hogrefe, 2005, 2011) as well as in Japanese, French and Dutch. Korean Edition is in press. Italian and Spanish are currently in preparation.

Narrative Exposure Therapy (NET) is a short-term treatment for adult and child survivors of multiple and complex trauma following experiences of severe forms of violence and disaster, as well as developmental trauma including childhood sexual abuse and maltreatment. In NET, the patient, with the assistance of the therapist, constructs a chronological narrative of her/his life story with an exposure focus on the traumatic events, modifying the emotional networks, regaining of the survivor's dignity and allowing for corrective relationship experiences when reprocessing the entire life. Fragmented reports are integrated meaningfully and transformed into a coherent biographical narrative, complemented by a testimony. Narrative Exposure Therapy, a well-tolerated and straightforward yet robust approach that is easy to teach to non-expert practitioners, has proven efficacy not only in low-income, resource poor contexts of continuous traumatic stress, but also in western in- and outpatient clinical settings for trauma spectrum and borderline personality disorder. Schauer, Elbert, Neuner and team have meanwhile developed and scientifically evaluated two special additions to classic NET; firstly: KIDNET (Narrative Exposure Therapy for Children) and secondly: FORNET (Narrative Exposure Therapy for Forensic Offenders).

Maggie Schauer provides trainings, lectures and supervision on Narrative Exposure Therapy (NET) for licensed Psychiatrist and Psychotherapists, for students and faculty and on scientific conferences in different continents since 2000- continued.
